It has been written the world of tomorrow belongs to the youth of today And we stop there Rather, would it not be well to write the world of tomorrow be longs to the youth of today and that world will be what that youth is today?

To lay rock on terra firma is to put it on its foundation. It moves not and troubles not its neighbors for it is inanimate.

To lay a house on terra firma is to put it on its foundation. It moves not and troubles not its neighbors for it is inanimate.

To lay a person on terra firma is to put him on his foundation. He moves in many plains and troubles its neighbors for it is animate.

Traversing his many plains in directions dictated by self-envisioned goals and extra-envisioned motives created by the collective will gathered for the preservation of the collective people, he finds itself impinging trails. Conflict may and can result.

As the foundation for the rock is firm, so man can achieve equal staying power on a foundation strong enough to support him. So assured and positioned he can progress.

Such foundations are brighter than color, stronger than any conflict, for their design is perfection. It finds its strength in reality. Reality which is the product of man's strength in individual stature and depth of ubiquitous understanding, and marked by a pervasive search for a reality created of truth and the courage to ascend, in respectful dignity, above the individual, in its quest.

Democracy functions at the behest of its individual members and so being it will mirror them. The greatness of the individual is achieved in its direction toward the good of all, and being less so shall the image be less.

Ink-inscribed parchment, indented cut rock and vaulted ceiling rooms are not strength. Strength in a democracy, is in the minds and souls of the people who move in the pale of light cast by their beings. The reality is then, for each to find—for the eloquence of all.

To find reality we must look. As we look we must learn. As we learn so we will find. Caution: sight is deceptive, colored and interpreted so learning is not always truth. For those for whom learning is reality let us learn to learn the Truth.

Reality is to a lonely some, lost in numerical and logarithmic bigness, whose tangle and confusion belies the danger of accelerated indifference and the destructive forces inherent therein

Loneliness is not a right given only to the old. For often it is the broth given to youth.

But to others realities will always be a singular event For many, and maybe in the dreams of all, our own private world, our own private street

If age is the incarcerator of physical freedom, let it then balance that reality with another; let it be the emancipator of accumulated knowledge.

a flood plain to be traversed in many directions for the heritage of the surrounding?

Frequently we hear: let us remove the shackles that bind and the halters that constrain us.

We are what we are and as evolution is slow to wrought change in the physical being so the evolution of social change is no less devoid of haste in its desire to evolve. No day will come when all at once the shackles will disappear and the halters fall away to leave us free to see the realities of other beings and other philosophies. They will have to wear from use until such time that they are cast aside along with other obsolescent trappings and vestiges of self concept and deception.

Nothing will bring this about more quickly than rubbing of halter to halter and shackle to shackle. Rubbing which takes place as we stand next to others. A friction, as were, generated of contact as we meet and experience the equally bound. And so in time we shall become free not through isolation but through experience.

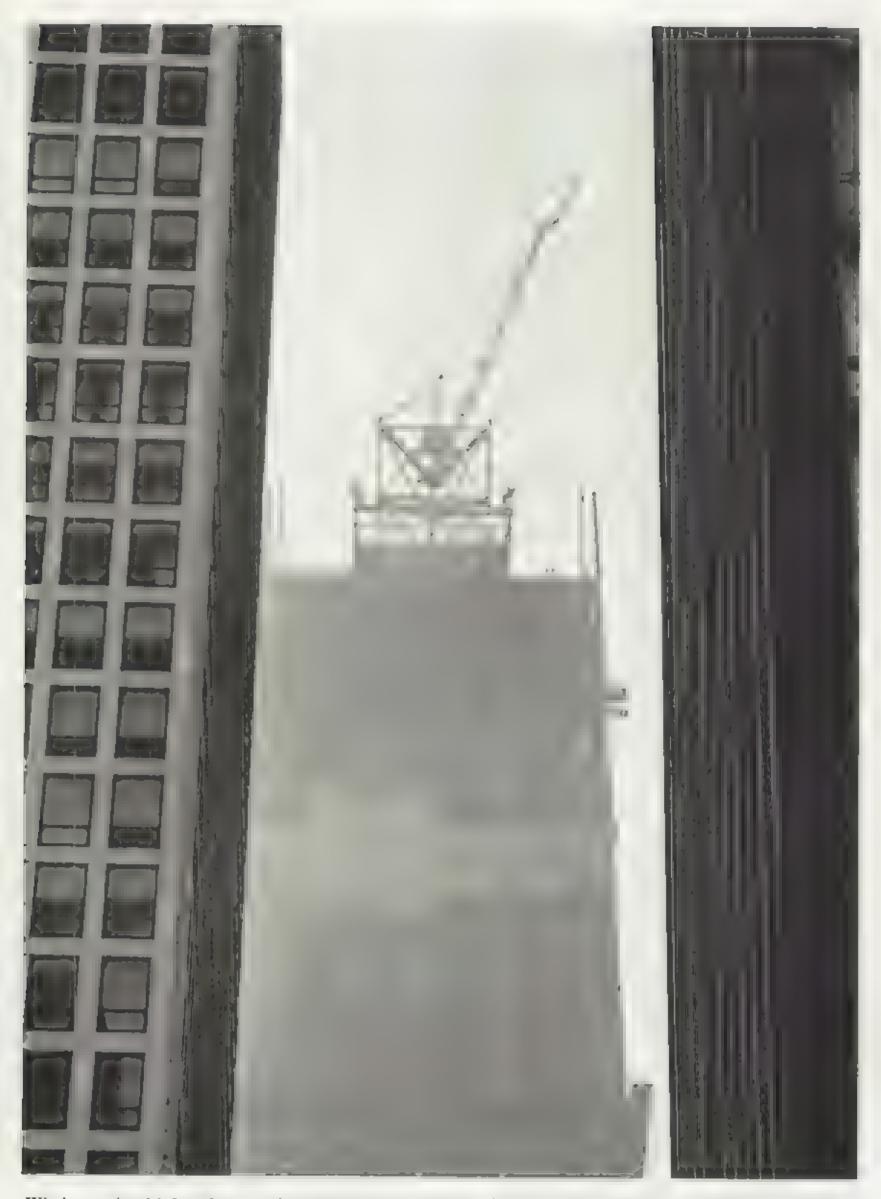

The machine brought to its fullest by contact born of his failure to see his own truth and the truth of others, war, gives us now the greatest opportunity to have contact, to bring friction, to wear thin, to cast away.

Then this machine is surely irony; a product of strife—a builder of peace. But then that's consistent man and his pronouncements, and man and his acts—for is that irony also.

The important thing is not the answer tomorrow may bring but that I keep looking for it tomorrow.

Youth plays in childlike innocence troubled only by child problems, real to them though they may be

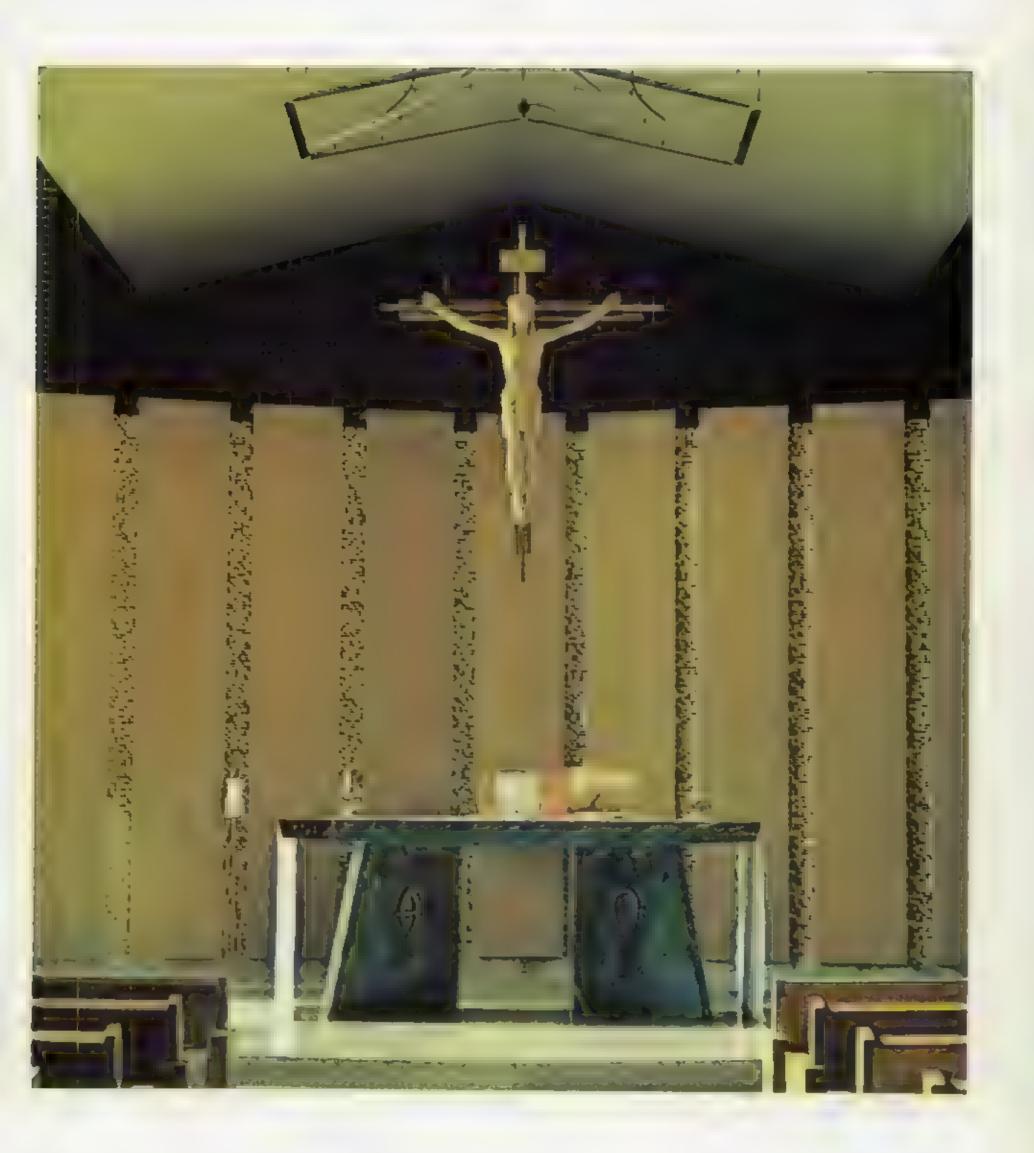

While we build for them today their playground of tomorrow canyon by canyon, without benefit of meaningful communication between the ages, let us pray that we be guided with foresightful wisdom

Of labor paid or bondage engaged.
Of piliared granite, old ivery, or wooden week
Or other material types. Look enraged
Description expended or treasure wasted
In frivoleus pursuit of imagined gain
Which come incomitive man of but tested in rukings and threatings of his myoptle brain
The tower of Babel has to dust and traveled
An Dred Scott and Homers' words still lift
And away edifices are to judgement gaveled
But for reality created no meen one wift.

[Furthese things whileh stand when they last."

Oh let me dream so broad and far Let me see horizons vast and wide: Allow me the feel of the oceans inbound tide

Let me know the gratification of success Let me feel the pain and anguish of failure jest And with this all give me but, occasional rest

Onward let my footsteps go Make compliance and stagnation not my quest But let me strive for fields anew: my seeds to test

And with it all let me learn Not indolence, distrust, distortion or hate: But compassion vision, horizons great

Let me in the end but come to peace And let people say of my path This place is better, it knew his laugh

Dear Graduates

Now that you have completed your high school career, I feel quite certain that you realize that your tenure was during a time of confusion concerning our value system. We have experienced, and still are experiencing, a sort of internal and external war over the questions and value of the continued existence of Catholic schools.

In this ispection, the house schools has but every phase of their operation, they create a ghetto mentality, they do not produce intellectuals, they turn out graduates who are so concerned with other worldly values that they are unable to compete economically, too much emphasis on religion, not enough emphasis on religion, too much in the way of athlet less. Name it and our Catholic schemes have been accused of it

It is not my purpose here to refute these charges. This has already been taken care of by many eminent scholars. My intention in calling to mind the present controversy is to impress upon you the responsibility which is yours as graduates of Marist, a vital cell in our Catholic educational system.

Evidence is plentiful to support the thesis that Catholic schools have been a significant, and possibly the most significant in the Cuttor of the confident that your lives will bear fitting testimony to our Catholic education system

May the blessing of Almighty God and His Blessed Mother be with you always

Sincerely in J M J
